4. [redacted] sometime in 1952 about 15 to 20 persons were arrested for their alleged complicity in placing a time bomb in the home of a certain StB official [redacted] who lived in Cerncice. They were also alleged to have placed a bomb in the home of another avid Communist [redacted] who lived in Versovice.¹ The above-mentioned group of individuals was convicted and sent away. [redacted]
5. [redacted] sometime in 1952 a member of the StB in Louny had had stones thrown through the windows of his home. He allegedly had shutters installed on all the windows of his home to discourage a recurrence of this incident.

Religious Demonstrations of an Anti-Regime Nature

7. [redacted] manifestations of religious groups against the regime. [redacted] was hardly possible in Czechoslovakia since the clergy there was State-supported. In the case of the Catholic Church, the priests had not had any connection with Rome since about 1952, and only pro-regime type clergymen were permitted to officiate. [redacted] priests who refused to break with Rome were interned in a forced labor camp somewhere in Slovakia.

Communist Popularity

8. [redacted] the Communists were losing ground in Czechoslovakia [redacted] the attitude of the people toward the present government was very disapproving, especially in the case of agricultural workers. These workers, some of whom formerly owned farms but were now working for the State after having had their farms confiscated, did not show much interest in raising good crops. [redacted] very often there were news items about these people and their poor work. It was common knowledge that agricultural workers in general were deliberately slowing down their work, since most of the former land owners were not benefiting by the amount or quality of their food output.

Military Desertions

9. [redacted] Secret Control was off-limits to EM; only officers were permitted to enter. [redacted] about five or six notices came into this office each week, reporting new deserters from the army. Most of them were from the infantry. These notices were in the form of "Wanted" posters, stating from what unit each individual had deserted and giving a general description of each deserter. [redacted]
- whenever a soldier failed to report to his unit within 24 hours after expiration of his pass or leave, he was classified as a deserter. This, however, did not necessarily indicate a desertion into foreign countries.

Mail Censorship

11. [redacted] people were opposed to mail censorship and therefore did not write as many letters as they would have liked. [redacted] mail going abroad was censored. [redacted]

12. [redacted] packages mailed to destinations outside of Czechoslovakia were also opened and inspected. Sometime in February 1955 [redacted] at the Louny post office, [redacted] some individuals submitting packages for inspection. All the contents of their packages were laid out on a table and checked by a customs official. This practice undoubtedly increased the animosity of the people against the Communist regime.

Estimate of Resistance Potential

14. [redacted] it would be very difficult to estimate in numbers the resistance potential of Czechoslovakia. However, [redacted] about 80 percent of the people would resist the regime actively, and possibly another 5 or 10 percent could be swayed, if the people knew that they had a fair opportunity of succeeding with a resistance movement and were assured of assistance by outside forces. Many individuals, especially those with large families, were going along with the regime because they felt that it would be of no use to resist.
